Some Hearts Sad, but Even Sorrow Is Assuaged by Blessings Given

Christmas Eve!

Its mystic charm and magic are everywhere, despite the driving rain.

The hurrying crowds reflect it. The fragrance of the evergreens tells us the greatest holiday of the Christian year is only a few hours away. Bright faces, happy voices, the glad clamor of the Salvation Army bells-all inseparable from Christmas Eve-all are here.

And Philadelphia is ready for the most wonderful Yuletide in all its history. The war has left an ache in many hearts, it is true, but there are joys to counterbalance the aches.

This is our victory Christmas! And the boys are coming home!

Many of them are already here, and to them this Christmas has a significance of which they never dreamed before.

The rain played havoc with new hats and soiled the natty fur coats, but failed to dampen the ardor of the Christmas crowds that jammed the shopping district again this afternoon.

Policemen stationed in the downtown section estimated that more than 150,-000 persons were crowded into the stores and shops in the central section of the city.

Charity will be bountiful tomorrow The poor will have a real Christmas. Many organizations and institutions distributed gifts today among the needy. Others will bestow their benefactions

Can't Help It

Santa's coming under an umberel!!

We're all awfully sorry, but it's going to rain tomorrow—Christmas Day—and the weatherman says he can't help it.

As a matter of fact, it's raining already—started this morning, it will rain all night, says the forecaster, and probably will rain all of tomorrow, or at least until evening.

The weather is expected to continue mild until tomorrow night, when a sharp drop in temperature is likely. If you want any snow, scrape the frost off the icebox!

And let's hope kris doesn't get his feet wet!
